Dear Harold:

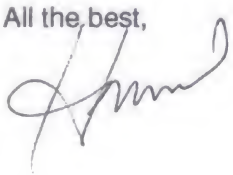
It was great to hear from you. And great to hear that you are still hard at work, even with all the physical limitations. You're an inspiration to us all. I was sorry to hear that you and Lil are requiring walking sticks, but I did smile at your description of his and her canes!

It was ironic that that the HBO movie on the Tuskegee airmen reminded you of me, since I do not recall telling you that this has been a pet project of my boss George Lucas for many years. He bought rights to their stories and began working with them to do a film, but it has bogged down over the years, without the ability to produce a script to his liking.

Wow, $150 for Presumed Guilty. Hard to believe, but I guess we can thank my publisher for making so rare.

Things are going very well here in San Francisco. Duane is quite happy in his job. Surprisingly, for a relatively young man of 42, he has developed a cataract in his left eye, which will be operated on late in September. It's a routine procedure these days and he is with a good, experienced surgeon so we are feeling pretty confident. My work has been intense, but that is good news because it has also been highly successful. It means much more frequent travel around the world. This year, in fact, I travelled to Hong Kong and spent a day in the factories in China, a fascinating experience. We are about to leave for a vacation on Fire Island.

Things are also going very well with my photography. The card "business" continues to lose money hand over fist, but it is my passion and I'm sorry that I never before sent some of the cards to you. Some samples are enclosed. More exciting to me now is that this fall a book of my photographs will be published by a good German publisher. This is a dream come true for me, and amazing that it has happened so early in my life as a photographer (4 years to be exact).

Please send our love to Lil. We hope that you are both getting on well, canes and all!


All the best,
